

NJ currently has one of, if not the, most complete Do Not Call legislation. Rather than ruling that NJ must relax its DNC restrictions, a better solution would be to tighten the federal legislation to match the NJ version. An alternative would simply be to have a Call List that would enable people to opt-in and allow telemarketers to call them. This would be preferable to consumers than needing to opt-out, especially when there are loop holes. Telling someone they are not welcome to call me is not violating their free speech -- if they want to stand on a street corner and advertise their wares, that's fine with me. Just don't waste my time calling me on my phone to make your pitch.
